A Small Win for Transparency

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

The Journal got somewhat of a win last week, when an appellate court upheld a Humboldt County judge's order to release a Eureka police video depicting the arrest of a 14-year-old boy in 2012.

To be clear, the court's published opinion is a big deal, as it now creates case law that unambiguously says these types of police videos — this one was captured on a dash-mounted in-car camera, but the opinion extends to body camera footage as well — can't be considered confidential personnel records. The 12-page opinion flatly rejects the city of Eureka's argument that because one of the officers involved in the arrest was accused of excessive force, spawning an internal affairs investigation and disciplinary proceedings, the video itself could be swept into his personnel file and shielded from public view.

Paul Nicholas Boylan, a Davis attorney representing the Journal in the appeal, said this precedent-setting opinion will reverberate throughout the state, noting that more and more city attorneys, police departments and prosecutors have tried to extend the legal protections granted police officer personnel records beyond their intended bounds.

This is all good news, in our view. We're relieved the appellate court saw the issue as we did: A video taken on taxpayer-purchased equipment capturing police officers carrying out their publicly entrusted duties in a public space can't be retroactively deemed confidential because someone accuses one of the involved officers of having done something wrong.

But this victory is in many ways more bitter than sweet. It's now been almost two years since we initially requested the video from the city of Eureka, and 14 months have now passed since Humboldt County Superior Court Judge Christopher Wilson granted our petition and ordered it released. Former EPD Sgt. Adam Laird — the officer charged with assault stemming from the arrest, only to have the case dismissed by prosecutors after a handful of police experts opined that he'd acted appropriately — has long since retired from the department, a separation that came as a part of the settlement of a claim he brought against the city because of its handling of the case. He is now in the midst of a second career as a private defense investigator. The Eureka Police Department is under new leadership, making whatever the video may or may not tell us about Laird's claim that he was somehow set up for prosecution due to his political views somewhat moot.

And, over the last year and a half, we at the Journal have poured lots of time and energy into pursuing this video, time that certainly could have gone toward reporting other stories in Humboldt County that are in desperate need of some public attention. Plainly, it shouldn't be this hard.

So, you'll have to pardon us if this all feels like a bit of a waste. Yes, we are happy and relieved that the court has ordered this video released, but what's wrong with our public agencies and the laws governing them that it took us so long to get to this point?

The answer is complicated. The California Public Records Act was authored decades ago and doesn't directly address video records in the digital age, meaning there isn't a clear roadmap for the public, the press or the government agencies that serve them. But more troubling is the bunker mentality that seems to pervade some governments, including the city of Eureka. It is crucial to note here that there isn't — and has never been — anything legally prohibiting Eureka from releasing this video. When the city denied a Journal records request for the video two years ago, it cited a pair of discretionary exemptions protecting investigative and personnel records, meaning the city was simply choosing not to release the video.

In a press release sent out after last week's ruling, the city said it's "evaluating its options" as to how to proceed. This is troubling, too.

In the press release, the city states that this case was never about transparency but "about ensuring the protection of police officer personnel records," rights guaranteed to officers by the California Constitution.

Well, the city now has four judges — Wilson and a trio of appellate justices — saying that those constitutional rights are in no way imperiled by the release of this video.

Still, the city says it needs to weigh options. In reality, it has only two: petition the supreme court to review the case or

"The city's procedural errors in the appeal make a reversal of the appellate decision so unlikely as to approach impossible."

— Attorney Paul Nicholas Boylan

follow Wilson's order and turn over the video.

The city has already racked up some expenses and dumped an untold number of limited staff hours into fighting release of this video (we've submitted a records request for a full accounting and will report what we find) and the city's fruitless appeal means it is now liable to pay the Journal's legal costs. Petitioning the supreme court opens the door to more expense.

Boylan said taking the case any further would be a foolish move. "The city's procedural errors in the appeal make a reversal of the appellate decision so unlikely as to approach impossible," he said. "It would be the longest of long shots, a rash gamble paid for with public money ... on something that never should have been appealed in the first place."

For the record, the Journal will continue to fight for the public's right to see this video because it's what's right. The public should be able to use the tools it paid for to evaluate the conduct of its officers, prosecutors and officials. And there's never been more wind in the sails of this argument than right now.

The day the appellate court issued its ruling, protests erupted in Baltimore with news that one of the officers accused of killing Freddie Gray had been acquitted of manslaughter charges and Baton Rouge police officials explained how a former U.S. Marine killed three police officers there in a planned attack. There is a crisis playing out in the nation, punctuated alternately by questionable officer involved deaths and horrific attacks on the police. Running underneath it all are a racial divide and current of distrust that — earned or not — have charged the conversation to polar extremes.

We believe transparency is the only answer: Show not only this video, but all use-of-force videos; let the public see how these events unfold in real time; give them an appreciation for what their officers face day in, day out; and allow community members to see use of force incidents so they can have informed conversations about tactics and training. We need to demystify these interactions between police and their communities, neutering the parallel distortions that officers are either infallible or blood-thirsty thugs.

In the press release issued in the wake of the court's ruling, the city of Eureka trumpeted its commitment to transparency, noting its investment in both dash and body worn camera technologies and stating its zero-tolerance approach to reports of police abuse or prejudice.

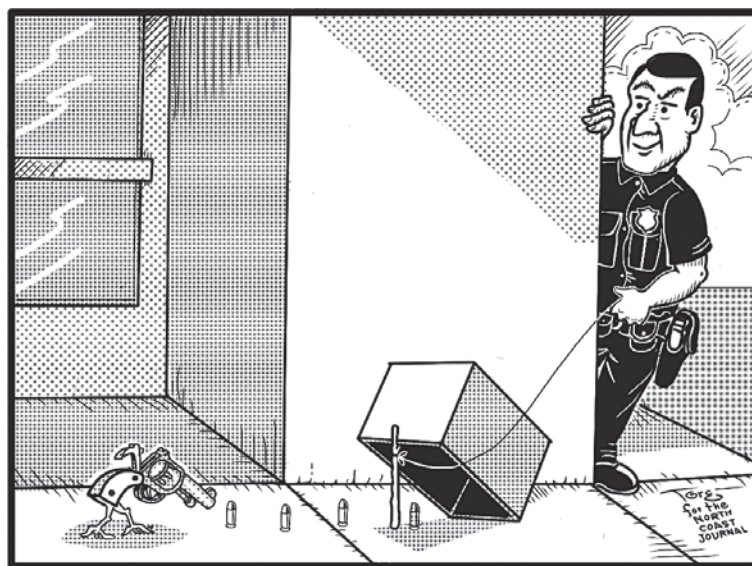

But transparency is much bigger than that, more a matter of philosophy than technology, more culture than policy. True transparency means trusting community members to hold an adult conversation and giving them the tools to facilitate it. It means swallowing hard and pushing liability concerns aside in order to lift the veil from difficult realities. It means being willing to admit mistakes and make amends.

And, sometimes, it means simply being willing to roll the tape and let the cards fall where they may.

The Biggest Hero

Editor:

My heroes in this victory for government accountability ("Arrest Video Can't be Kept Confidential, Appellate Court Rules", posted July 21) saving the best for last: The Journal's, and Thadeus Green-son's, courage and perseverance, to the point of litigation when good journalism alone wasn't enough. Judge Wilson's courage in the face of massive government resistance. The appellate court, not just for ordering disclosure, but for ordering that its ruling be published, so that it can be cited in future cases.

But most of all, the kid in the video, who waived his right to keep the video secret. Without his bravery, none of this would have been possible. Hats off to you kid, whoever you are.

The Taxman Cometh

SoHum growers mull trusting, paying the Man

By Linda Stansberry
linda@northcoastjournal.com

Public comment during last Tuesday's Board of Supervisors meeting stretched close to two hours, as many small growers turned up to protest a proposed excise tax. While county staff had originally recommended a tiered system in which taxes scale up with grow sizes, topping out at $6 per square foot for a 10,000-square-foot indoor grow, the tax was slashed twice during subsequent board meetings, first by a full 25 percent, then to $1/$2/$3 per square foot for outdoor, mixed light and indoor grows, respectively. Some say this change will unfairly penalize small producers whose cost-to-yield ratio will be higher than those with larger operations. Alex Moore, first in the county to have a permitted "megagrow," was one of the lone speakers to express approval for the measure. Moore's operation, Honeydew Farms LLC, has been approved to expand from 1 to 7 acres.

"We need the money in this industry," said Moore during public comment, adding with a chuckle that the urging of some to wait until 2018, when state permits will become available, to enforce taxes "sounds good" to him, but he doubted the board would wait that long.

And it doesn't appear it will. The board approved the ballot measure to go up for a vote in November, with Supervisor Ryan Sundberg noting it can "fine tune" some details at a later date. He and others said there had been ample time for public input on the tax measure, and that the item needed immediate approval in order to make it onto the ballot.

"We need the funds," said Supervisor Estelle Fennell. "There are not many changes we can make today."

A SoHum resident asks for a regional compliance office.
Linda Stansberry

The excise tax is estimated to insert $7.3 million into the county general fund for "public safety, job creation; crime investigation/prosecution; environmental cleanup/restoration; children/family mental health and drug rehabilitation." The estimate is based on the projected registration of 400 grows; to date, the county has received 108 applications and approved two. Seven million dollars might sound like a hefty figure, but on the scale of the costs of running a county, it breaks down to around 2 percent of Humboldt's 2016-2017 budget. For some perspective, the county currently has $200 million in deferred road repairs alone.

For growers hoping to become compliant with the county's medical marijuana ordinance, the tax comes on top of what some are saying is an onerous financial burden for certification. Application fees are a couple thousand dollars, with additional money out the door for engineering, consultancy and bringing facilities up to code. The specter of additional state taxes and the county's requirement that distribution be separated from cultivation (distributors are currently requesting 20 to 35 percent of gross receipts from sales) cut further into what used to be a lucrative bottom line.

"For those of you seeking a carrot to bring people in, this seems awfully like a stick," said Danielle Burkhart during public comment.

Burkhart, a consultant with Emerald Heritage Farms, later expanded on her comments in a phone interview.

"I'm seeing that if you're under roughly 10,000 square feet, in the 2,000- to 6,000-square-foot range, you're going to be hit hardest by this," she said, adding that consultancy alone can cost around $8,000. "Certification is costly. There are no loans for this. The idea of [growers] raking in the cash is a stereotype."

Still, she acknowledges that the ballot measure will probably pass.

"I think you put tax and cannabis in the same ballot, it's a no brainer. People are going to vote for it," she said, adding that small growers are a relatively small voting bloc. The changes to the tax ordinance might be another obstacle in the path of county officials who are trying to convince members of a traditionally insular and suspicious industry to come out into the light. This was apparent in a recent community meeting in Southern Humboldt, where Fennell brought in representatives from the county planning department, sheriff's office, water quality and California Department of Fish and Wildlife to address concerns from residents.

The July 22 meeting, held at Beginnings in Briceland, was sponsored by the Civil Liberties Monitoring Project. Around 40 community members came to ask questions, most centering around the tension between small "heritage" growers and larger growers who arrived during the "Green Rush." Steve Lazar, a senior planner with the county, said the crowd was very different from the one that attended a compliance workshop he held the week prior. At that time, he said, the parking lot was full of trucks with out-of-state license plates.

Fennell and Lazar, who were present at a larger and much rowdier meeting in Bridgeville last month, acknowledged that there were challenges inherent in regulating the industry.

"It's going to be a frustrating situation for a couple of years," said Lazar. "In the meanwhile, hopefully, we can address some of the most egregious problems."

Those egregious problems, as submitted by the CLMP prior to the meeting, include wear and tear to shared access roads, illegal water diversions, noise and light pollution, and the perceived preferential treatment of bigger growers over mom-and-pops "being swept up in an avalanche of regulations, fees and costs."

Several people expressed fear of being dinged for incidental code violations should they invite representatives from the planning department onto their properties.

"When you apply for a cannabis permit you don't need to fix every little thing," said Lazar, who also said larger grows would be under greater scrutiny. "The bigger you are, the faster you should come into compliance."

Very well, said the crowd, but who is actually enforcing compliance? Next year growers will be subject to an annual inspection (incurring another fee to the county). In the meantime, there are thousands of illegal grows, many on sites that have been illegally graded, that are using streams and rivers for their water sources, with generators roaring through the night and day, and with no money coming in to adequately enforce them.

"I tracked down 15 different generators in my neighborhood," said George Holper, who said she is no longer able to sit peacefully in her front yard. "Actually, I heard yours, Estelle."

"Yes, I like to watch TV at night," murmured Fennell, who is a Redway resident.

Actually, Lazar said, there is specific language in the ordinance to address both noise and light pollution. If your neighbor's grow is legal, the county will, at some point, be able to come in and shut down the noise. And if the grow is illegal? Ostensibly, after Jan. 1, 2017, the ordinance will allow law enforcement to separate the bad actors from the good ones. In the meantime, community members are still encouraged to call a tip line. Complaints will be directed to the sheriff's office, water quality or CDFW as necessary. Several people at the meeting expressed unease at the increased scrutiny and the idea of going on record about their existing operations. (The sheriff's office will use satellite images to monitor whether a grow has sprung up or expanded post-registration.)

"So, this means we're admitting to past illegal activity?" asked one audience member.

"Yes," said Undersheriff Billy Honsal with a small smile. "You're having faith in a system."

A bout of nervous chuckling roiled the audience.

"We know you're doing it anyway," continued Honsal, adding that his officers had served warrants on several properties that claimed to be growing medical marijuana but hadn't had proof. The plants were cut and the district attorney is pressing charges.

"Good!" said one woman.

"We are complaint-driven," said Honsal. "We need you to complain to us, not your neighbors. I wish we had 15 to 20 deputies assigned to this. The reality is we have five. Become a police helper. Help us."

At this, the chuckles bubbled up again, but when the tip line number was repeated, people scrambled to write it down. Lazar says his department has received 13 complaints to date.

"I'm not saying it's going to be easy," said Lazar. "But we're getting the dialogue started."

The longer I work in media, the more tempted I am to write a guide for the general public on how media works. And, given that I've only worked in media for a little more than a year, logic would imply that, at some point very soon, I'll succumb to temptation, leave my job at the Journal and devote a year to writing a book on how many exclamation marks press releases should include (fewer than five!!!!!!), among other newsroom bugaboos. And, by "at some point very soon," I mean probably after my editor finishes reading this column and asks me to leave.

Five Shocking Ways Modern Media Tricks You Into Reading Long Things: You Won't Believe #6! (working title) will devote a whole chapter to buried truths. Most of us in journalism are familiar with the phrase "burying the lede," in which a writer takes the most interesting aspect of a story and "buries it" under exposition, like a Bay Area colleague who wrote about a drunk man arrested and tased by police, skipping over the fact that the arrestee was naked and dripping wet at the time. Buried truths are a different symptom endemic to the current state of the Fourth Estate in which inconvenient facts that would undermine the sensationalism of a story are tucked away at the very bottom.

Take a recent event that stampeded across headlines when the town of Hugo, Colorado, advised citizens not to drink or use public water after finding the supply had been tainted with THC. The story was picked up by local newspapers and made its way into the New York Times and onto National Public Radio. TIME Magazine included the chortle-worthy headline, "Colorado Town at Risk of Getting High on Its Own Water Supply." In my upcoming book, You're Doing Media All Wrong!!!! — Here's How (another working title), I will advise savvy news readers to skip ahead to find the facts, in this case, that THC is not water soluble and, according to a statement by Lincoln County Health Officer

John Fox, "It would take more product than any of us could afford to contaminate a city water supply to the extent that people would suffer any effects." Fox was quoted in the Denver Post, five paragraphs and three advertisements down, after the story noted that the FBI, Colorado Bureau of Investigation, local sheriff's office and mayor were all investigating the issue. But the headline "Town, State and Federal Officials Baffled by Simple Science," probably won't sell papers or swell the bladders of Hugo teenagers.

Another chapter in Twelve Sexy Tips to Make Your News Cycle HOT (feel free to email suggestions to linda@northcoastjournal.com) will be devoted to general myopia and laziness. We know, thanks to the New York Times, that a study published in the Journal of the American Medical Association reveals a 150 percent jump in marijuana exposure among Colorado children since 2014. We also know Colorado's governor recently signed a bill banning gummy edibles shaped like fruit and animals because they're too attractive to children.

The Times article suggests marijuana toxicity in children might have been underreported in previous years, and parents are now giving more accurate information to emergency room doctors. What the Times fails to delve into is why these irresponsible fucking people have children. Isn't marijuana supposed to lower your sperm count? How hard is it to put your edibles where your kids won't find them? If you're going to get high, why not just be an adult and use a vaporizer instead of eating something that looks like a miniature neon stuffed bear? And if, God forbid, your kids do get into your stash and go to the ER, just tell the doctors the truth so they can give your offspring the best medical care possible. I promise not to put you on blast with a headline like, "Pothead Parents Poison PreTeens!!!!!"

That is, if I still work here.

Court Doc: Mom Is Suspect in Fortuna Hit and Run, Showed Signs of Intoxication

An initial CHP investigation indicated the mother of one of two teenage girls who died after a July 12 hit and run crash was the driver, and that she showed signs of intoxication shortly after the collision, according to a search warrant affidavit.

“At that point, however, there was no evidence establishing her as the driver of the Jeep and a chemical test to determine her level of intoxication was not sought,” states the document, which was made public July 26.

Described as one of two “parties of interest” by the CHP, the investigation also indicated Marcia “Marci” Kitchen “concealed the Jeep behind her residence immediately after the collision and has since made attempts to dissuade her son from providing a statement to law enforcement,” according to the document.

The affidavit does not specify where investigating CHP Officer Chase Adams made his observation that Marci Kitchen was reportedly showing symptoms of being under the influence, but states it was “moments after the collision.”

Her attorneys have said she is ready to surrender to law enforcement but no arrests have been made in the case, as CHP is asking her to cooperate with the investigation by making a voluntary statement.

Officers from the CHP and Fortuna Police Department found the two girls after responding to Eel River Drive after receiving a report of a hit and run crash just after 9 p.m. on July 12.

Faith Tsarnas died at the scene and Kiya Kitchen succumbed to her injuries the next day at an Oakland hospital.

The brother of Kiya Kitchen told investigators he was at the family’s Becker Lane home — about a mile from the scene of the accident — with a friend on the night of July 12 when the girls said they were going longboarding.

“Sometime later, ‘Josh,’ (Marci’s boyfriend) came in and told them there had been an accident on the quarter mile with some kids,” an affidavit by CHP Special Agent Paul Craft states. “(The brother and his friend) drove out to the scene and saw that it was Kiya and Faith. Josh and Marci showed up shortly after that in Josh’s black Chevy.”

Joshua Pearlston has also been described a party of interest in the case.

It was not clear when they arrived at the scene or what, if any, interaction they had with officers there.

When contacted by the Journal, CHP Sgt. Michael Campbell stated through a dispatcher that no updates were being released at this time. Inquiries about the warrants to search Marci Kitchen’s house and obtain her phone records were directed to Officer Cy May, who is out of the office for the day.

The CHP has released few details over the last two weeks, asking in a recent press release for the public’s patience, stating “this is a very complex case and we have to be thorough to ensure those who are responsible are held accountable for their crimes.”

The brother’s friend told officers that

Marci Kitchen’s gray Jeep Wrangler was not at the Becker Lane home when they left for the accident scene but was there when they returned, according to the court documents. He also said he was sure the Jeep had not driven past him while he was on Eel River Drive.

A badly damaged gray Jeep registered to Marci Kitchen was found in her backyard on July 13, further shaking a community already reeling from the deaths of the two girls.

Despite claims from Marci Kitchen’s attorneys that they informed police of the vehicle’s location, its recovery appears to have already been underway when the attorneys reached out to police. According to the affidavit, a Fortuna police officer had already tipped CHP off to Marci Kitchen’s owning a vehicle matching the one involved in the crash and an officer had already spotted the car in Kitchen’s backyard through a neighboring fence.

PIT BOYS

The story of a cowboy barbecue

By Amy Barnes

Tarps are spread over the smoking covered barbecue pits at the Fortuna Rodeo.

“I’m gettin’ bloody here!”

The meat arrives

It’s 7:25 on a foggy Fortuna morning and it’s quiet but for the beep, beep, beep-ing of the Ayers delivery truck reversing alongside the volunteer fire department. The driver parks and, using a hydraulic lift, removes 47 cardboard cases of beef from the back of his truck.

Don Jacobsen tears open a case, pulls out a large hunk and inspects it with the eye of a connoisseur. A retired meat cutter, Jacobsen has volunteered at the Fortuna Rodeo Barbecue since 1963. That’s 53 years. Folks say he’s the master of the deep pit barbecue.

The beef passes Jacobsen’s muster, and the team of 12 assembled volunteers works fast, unpacking the 3,979 pounds of meat, (the approximate weight of two Volkswagen Bugs). Under the direction of barbecue committee co-chairs Dave Nicholson and Robb Foley, everyone jumps in to help. The barbecue team has been working together for years; decades even. They’ve got this down.

Even so, it’s a messy scene. Jacobsen’s grandson Jake Trotter slices open the plastic wrappers and stacks 188 XT shoulder clods on foldaway tables set up in the fire department parking lot. Blood pools on the asphalt. The roasts, which are the best choice for the barbecue because of their large, consistent size, good price and lean composition, are first bathed in a tray of Carlo Rossi Rhine, then passed to the next station, where they’re rolled in a powdery, moss-colored, top secret special seasoning and repacked into cases.

The contents of the top secret special seasoning are, of course, classified. Tom Hard, who concocted the blend, was suspected to be out fishing and thus couldn’t be reached for comment or hassled for particulars. But the recipe has been in his family for generations. The 90 pounds of coveted goodness is stored matter of factly in a Gott beverage cooler.

Only with the beef seasoned, tucked back into its cases and stashed in a refrigerated truck borrowed from Humboldt Creamery, does the crew pop open a few celebratory cans of America (aka, Budweiser). The guys seem pleased at a job well done, and the parking lot hums with contented banter and jocular hassling.

Larry Tucker, former fireman, rodeo man, businessman and Little League coach, is holding court at the back of a truck. He strikes a supervisory pose in his straw cowboy hat and pointy boots and exclaims, “I’ve been doing this since 1964.” Holding a coffee cup in a hand that will soon hold a can of beer, he explains that he won’t be there to light the pits later this afternoon because he’s done that enough years. Instead, he’s heading over to the rodeo grounds for the Bull-o-Rama and the Bronco Riding.

Rodeo has been in full swing all week, starting with Monday’s Chili Cook-off. Last night was the Diesel Truck Tug-of-War and the Quad Barrel Racing. But the rodeo crescendo is surely Sunday’s barbecue, the icing on the cake, or the Carlo Rossi on the beef, of rodeo week.

By 10 o’clock Saturday morning, the sun begins to burn through the fog and the seasoning volunteers disperse. Everything is taken care of until the 4 p.m. pit lighting. Empty lawn chairs line Main Street in anticipation of the noon parade. Rotarians linger alongside festooned trucks and a clown drives past in a VW bus. Over at the rodeo grounds, the Kiwanis pancake breakfast is wrapping up and the spindly, garish carnival rides are unmoving. Horses swish their tails in the sunshine while their riders top up on coffee, readying for the day.

Lighting the deep pits

The rodeo caller’s bombastic voice swims in the background as Nicholson and crew prep to set some stuff on fire. With a deep pit barbecue, the initial fire is key. Nicholson whips out a 5-gallon jug of diesel and a few road flares. “Time to sauce ‘em up good!” he hollers with all the enthusiasm of an 8-year-old boy about to do something naughty.

Wood pallets and seasoned black oak from the Hunt Ranch up in Bridgeville are loaded evenly across the bottom of the three brick-lined pits, which are about 3-by-5 feet wide and 6 feet deep. Black oak is used not for any flavoring goals, but because it makes a dense, reliable bed of coals. Nicholson and Jacobsen scrutinize the scenario. It's windy out, and they hope they don't set fire to the new streetlamp installed directly overhead. The fires are hesitant to start, so Nicholson heads over to Renner to pick up more diesel. He returns and administers a fresh helping of fuel to the pits, and the flames whoosh high into the air. "That's how it's supposed to be!" he exclaims triumphantly.

Ignition accomplished, the volunteers treat themselves to a soda and settle in for the long night ahead. They'll keep the plywood pit lids sprayed down with water and add firewood in alternating directions every hour until 11 p.m., careful to fill in all gaps in order to establish a thick, uniform foundation. Nicholson explains, "Each load is crucial to get the correct depth of coals."

The late afternoon air is charged, and a steady crowd streams past the pits toward the parking lot. Sleepy kids grasping steamy bags of cotton candy are shuttled by on sunburnt shoulders. A cowboy on a cellphone leans over the chain-link fence to hassle the barbecue crew and buy a ticket for tomorrow's feast. The occasional sweaty, kinda-drunk rodeo spectator lollops past in short shorts and high-heeled boots. For all that people watching, the pit crew has the best seat in the house.

"At least his beard didn't get singed."

The meat goes on

The wives and daughters of the late night crew bring chairs and make sure everybody gets fed. A table is overflowing with snacks and drinks, and hot dogs cooked over the mounting pile of embers. Conversation is hushed, contemplative. It's almost 1 a.m.

As planned, the last load of wood went on a couple of hours ago, and the coals are burning white hot. "Put your hand over here," someone says, and it's hard to imagine the fires getting any hotter.

Nicholson sidles up. "The barbecue committee could not have a barbecue without these people," he says, looking around at the group assembled by the fire. "They are the backbone."

"My kids were raised between the fire pit and the rodeo ground," adds Karen Jacobsen, Don's wife. Her daughter, now grown, is there to help, as are her sons-in-law and a collection of grandchildren. Karen explains that the rodeo barbecue crew is made up of about 40 volunteers who step in for various tasks over the course of the weekend. The meat crew is made up of friends and family, but mostly it's meat cutters, or retired meat cutters, from local markets.

With only seven years spent on the barbecue crew, Scott Fowler is a relative newcomer. Whatever he may lack in experience, though, he makes up for with enthusiasm. More of a surfer than a cowboy, Fowler says he loves helping with the barbecue. "I look forward to it all year, then, Sunday evening, when it's over, I'm like, 'Goshdarnit, I gotta wait a whole year to do it again!'"

Right around 1 a.m., Fowler pulls on borrowed fire department turnouts and places iron bars mid-way down across the pit. He then lowers grates on top of the bars. Any remaining funk from previous barbecues burns off. Volunteers bring the crates of meat from the refrigerated truck, dripping with wine and blood, and stack them close by.

Jacobsen gives the nod and the meat is hefted onto the grates with bare hands. He stands at the edge of the pit giving orders like a military mastermind: "Give me one right here. Fat side up! That one's wrong, put the tails inward. Fill the gaps!" He's pointing in a tactical fashion, leaning over the pit, face alight from the hot glow of the embers.

Once the roasts are distributed two or three deep, the team works to seal the pits. First, the iron channels around the lips of the pits are filled with water. The lids are then lifted on and covered with heavy, damp canvas tarps to contain the heat and wood pallettes to hold everything in place. With the pits locked down, everyone says goodnight and drifts toward home.

“Four generations in the cookshack!”

Lucille's beans

The bean crew is a sassy bunch. They've been cooking since 7 a.m., navigating the morning on a gentle wave of coffee and moonshine. Siblings Mike Bonnikson and Pam Berry head up the crew, along with their kids, grandkids and cohorts Tina Smith and Jeff Robison. “We took over this job 15 years ago," Berry explains. "Previous to this, they just opened cans of beans and that's what you got."

It's grandma Lucille Bonnikson's recipe and, although the precise details are top secret, the contents include kidney and butter beans, sautéed hamburger, bell peppers, onion, brown sugar and liquid smoke. Bubbling away in giant vats stirred with long wooden paddles, the 70 gallons of beans smell fabulous. After about four hours of simmering, they are transported over to the serving table in wagons, one pot at a time. "The rest stay in the cookshack and we take them down as needed so nobody gets cold beans," explains Smith.

Berry goes over the rest of the barbecue menu, which includes pre-made Reser's Raspberry Parfait. "It's really just Jell-O, but we don't tell people that!" she laughs. The soft white bread rolls are from the Ray's bakery in Fortuna. Although the dough is pre-made out of the area, local bakers cut, shape and bake 1,900 individual rolls over the course of two days.

"And the potato salad?" Berry continues, "When people go up for potato salad they ask, 'Is this Wally's potato salad?' If it is, they'll take it. Otherwise, they'll pass it up."

Wally's wife, Sandra Close, of CC Market in Rio Dell, says 500 pounds of hand-peeled red potatoes and 600 eggs were used to make the 60 gallons of potato salad required to feed the rodeo barbecue crowd. They add other stuff like salt, pepper and garlic, but, Close says, "Best Foods mayonnaise and red potatoes are probably what make it good." It takes her crew of seven people a full day to prepare the salad. Due to the nature of the beast, "it has to be done quickly," she says. "It's a family recipe," she adds, but mentions nothing about it being top secret.

Outside the cookshack, the rodeo grounds are bustling. "Whoo hoo! Good morning!" someone calls across the crowd of workers. Two bands are setting up, someone's making cardboard signs and a guy is stalking around on top of the picnic tables with a leaf blower, hoping to dry things out a bit before the tablecloths go down.

At 9:30, a full hour and a half before the barbecue is served, the first person stations herself at the front of the line. Unmoved by the long wait and the unseasonably drizzly weather, she stands calmly amid the chaos, explaining how she came nice and early so she could get to bingo on time. By 10 o'clock, there are hordes more in line behind her.

"Nice and juicy!"

The beef is ready

Back at the pits, the meat is still entombed, but not for long. Jacobsen hovers quiet and thoughtful. The tarps are off now, and people circle the pits, placing their hands on the covers to feel the warmth still coming through.

After slow cooking in the pits since the wee hours of Sunday morning, the finished beef shoulder roasts are cut and served at the Fortuna Rodeo Barbecue.

Jacobsen suddenly makes the call, "PULL THAT COVER!" he shouts, like the commander of a ship. Smoke billows from the pits, erupting with the smell of earthy charcoal. Jacobsen's grandson, Jake, settles his pitchfork into the first lump of meat, which has a weathered, greeny-brown, almost prehistoric look about it. It's so tender, it falls to pieces when he lifts it. People reach in with their hands and grab chunks to sample. The crew murmurs with satisfied approval: "Looks perfect..." "That taste never gets old..." "Just barely holding together..." "Nice and juicy..." "Not gonna argue with that..." "I don't want you to starve over there, anybody starves around here it's their own fault!"

Once the meat is evaluated and approved by the crew, another two of Jacobsen's grandkids sidle up with massive roasting pans. The meat is hoisted from the pit with more pitchforks, one roast at a time, and the kids run it across to the serving tables.

The line is outrageously long by now; it goes two or three people across, down the street, around the corner and spills into the baseball field parking lot. A few cunning folks have brought folding chairs for their stint of line dwelling. They speculate comfortably in the swarm of activity.

The music starts up and there's a random, hearty yelp from the crowd. It's time to eat. Everyone is smiling. The food servers glow with satisfaction as they load up the plates. The butter lady is careful to nestle the pat of butter next to the Jello so it won't melt when the meat goes on. The bean lady's got her baby girl in a backpack carrier, and her little feet are kicking to the time of the music. The meat guys are using a new technique to serve this year — 16-ounce red Solo cups — to provide more consistency in portions. It's not pretty, but it seems to be working.

As the band launches into a song about a farmer's daughter, I find a spot at a picnic table, unwrap my plastic utensils and dig in. The beans are good and tangy. The beef, smoky and messy and delicious, falls apart on the fork. Wally's crew has outdone itself with the potato salad, the bread is soft and it's a damn fine raspberry parfait.

"Everybody seems happy!" someone calls out to Dave Nicholson. "That's all we can ask for!" he replies heroically, disappearing into the frenetic crowd, clearly on a mission of some sort. All over the place, people are eating. Some are seated at the mind-bogglingly long picnic tables on the cookshack lawn and others are gathered around tailgates in the baseball field. In the middle of it all, two old cowboys catch each other's eye, nod across the crowd and exchange a thumbs up.

The end result of the all that work by all those people is nearly 2,000 paper plates of food served up in two hours flat. But really, it's so much more. It's family, community and tradition with a whole lot of love thrown in. As Karen Jacobsen leaned over and said around midnight, "It's nice to have roots set down so deep you can't move." ●

Farmers' Favorites

By Simona Carini

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

When in doubt, ask the farmer. Wondering about the name of a strange-looking vegetable or fruit? Unsure how to prepare some produce you only bought because it looked too beautiful to leave behind? Concerned about properly storing your precious purchase? Ask the farmer.

Farmers love the products they grow and bring to market, and I have always found them eager to talk about them. What do I ask farmers? I like to know the name of the variety of produce I buy. As a writer, I spend a lot of time looking for the right words and I feel a kinship of sorts with people who name things, like new varieties of fruits and vegetables.

Frederic Diekmeyer of Luna Farm knows about this innocent idiosyncrasy of mine so he often provides me the information before I ask. This happened recently when I picked up a basket of pretty yellow cherry tomatoes, the first ones he had brought to market. "Esterina," he announced before I had opened my mouth. "Sweet," he added. And into my shopping bag they went.

Being a passionate cook means I usually have a plan when I purchase an item. But farmers cook, too, and I started wondering about their favorite dishes that use produce available this time of the year. So I asked, starting with Diekmeyer.

A dish he loves to prepare is a roasted vegetable salsa with tomatoes, tomatillos, fresh garlic and onion. He gave me a couple more indications — any kind of tomatoes, oven at 400 F for 20 minutes or so, fresh parsley and cilantro at the end — and off I went. When I tasted the first spoonful, my only thought was, Why have I not tried this before?

The next farmer I asked was Ginger Sarvinski of Sarvinski Family Farms and The Corn Crib farm stand. Besides produce, she brings pastured eggs and pork to market.

Tomatoes feature prominently in her favorite fare as well. She never eats mayonnaise — "ever" — but during heirloom tomato season, she reaches for it to prepare her lunch: a tomato sandwich. When we had this conversation she didn't yet have any tomatoes for sale, but I knew exactly what she meant, having photographed and purchased them in past years.

I am also a fan of the tomatoes-and-mayonnaise combination, the latter homemade, because I like to see the creamy condiment come to life before my eyes with the help of an immersion blender.

Ginger Sarvinski uses whole-wheat bread, mayonnaise and a thick slice of heirloom tomato.

Possible variations on this theme are endless, including turning the sandwich into a tomato and mayonnaise salad with bread on the side. I add a couple of fresh basil leaves, shredded.

So, you see, I asked the farmer and got two very nice summer recipes. I will do it again and share the results here.

Roasted-Vegetable Salsa

My rendition of Frederic Diekmeyer's recipe makes 1½ cups.

4 ounces tomatillos
6 ounces fresh onion (preferably red), clean weight
8 ounces tomatoes (cherry, heirloom, slicing or a mix), ripe but firm
1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil
1 fresh garlic head with a dozen cloves
¼ teaspoon fine sea salt, or to taste
1 pinch of freshly ground black pepper, or to taste
Fresh parsley and/or cilantro leaves

Heat the oven to 400 F. Line a cookie sheet with a silicone baking mat that is wider and longer than the sheet.

Prepare the vegetables and place them in a bowl. Remove husks and rinse tomatillos under warm water to remove stickiness. Cut them in half crosswise. Cut onion(s) into ¼ to ¾ inch dice. Wash tomatoes. Cut cherry tomatoes in half lengthwise. Slice larger tomatoes. Drizzle the olive oil over the vegetables and toss gently, then spread them on the prepared sheet. Place the garlic head on a corner of the baking sheet.

Bake for 20 minutes, then let cool. Peel the garlic cloves. Transfer all the vegetables and their juices into a food processor. Add the salt and pepper. Pulse to chop the vegetables, but leave a bit of texture.

Transfer salsa to a bowl. If you make this ahead, refrigerate until 30 minutes before serving. Add ½ tablespoon of minced fresh herbs of your choice and stir. Create your own variation.

Almost Famous

Moon over Buffalo at NCRT

By David Jervis

frontrow@northcoastjournal.com

The traveling stage family was once a commonplace American archetype, from high classical theater to Shakespearean companies taking dusty journeys around the 19th-century frontier, and then onto the scrappy times of the vaudeville circuit and beyond. From the esteemed Barrymore family, its descendants alive and tweeting to this day, to the semi-fictionalized mother and daughters of the magnificent Gypsy to the tragically haunted Tyrone clan of Eugene O'Neill's A Long Day's Journey Into Night, it's not so much the onstage part, but what goes on in dressing rooms and at happy hours and on trips along the highways and byways that is the stuff of good drama and comedy. With the North Coast Repertory Theatre's Moon Over Buffalo, it's into the comic half of that sphere that we are quickly drawn.

Tony Award-winner Ken Ludwig wrote Buffalo in 1996 and it made its debut on Broadway, aided by his love for and a knack for understanding all the machinations of putting on a show. So here's the setup, as they used to say: In 1953 Buffalo — pegged by one of the characters as "Scranton without the charm" — we quickly meet George and Charlotte Hay, middle-aged, married actors quibbling between themselves while they tackle local repertory productions. George (David Hamilton, channeling the comic chops of Kevin Kline in the best ways possible) seems to be happy doing Cyrano in these less-than-glamorous locales, while Charlotte (Jacqui Cain, seen recently in Death by Design) is less than enthused when her suspicions are confirmed that George has managed to get Eileen (Sara Krause), a younger ingénue in their cast, with child. Also among the family in the backstage Rapier and wit from Amanda Slinkard and David Hamilton.

(and nearby) environs are George's hard of hearing mother, Ethel (Toodie Boll), and daughter Roz (Amanda Slinkard), who has broken the news that she is marrying a TV weatherman (Anders Carlson) instead of long-suffering stage manager Paul (area theater vet Evan Needham, who blessedly seems to be on stage everywhere lately).

What kicks the plot into some acceleration is the news that famed director Frank Capra will be in the audience for the night's performance, possibly looking for a lead for his film of The Scarlet Pimpernel. George and Charlotte switch into high gear, Roz sidelines the news about her marriage to help manage the semi-drunken family mayhem that follows and other bits of business fall into place. Moon Over Buffalo falls perfectly into and embraces the genre of the door-slaming, zany bedroom farce. Director Scott Malcolm's cast — most notably Hamilton and Sinkard — and production work well off what's frankly kind of "meh" material. Rather than starting off strong and peaking too early, the production builds up steam from a slow start. The first act is burdened with some exposition that drags and some Ethel hearing-aid jokes fall so flat that I might've heard ladybugs moving around on the roof. Fortunately, the material and the manic energy build well. This sub-genre of green room mistaken identity and misunderstandings, dating famously back to Michael Frayn's Noises Off, finds a good groove when it gets going. And it picks up comic speed as it goes along, in everything from a great drunken running joke from George to some clamoring physical comedy which includes a misunderstanding that leads to a play-within-a-play mishmash of Cyrano and Noel Coward's Private Lives, which itself is, for a few minutes, funnier than I could fairly describe. Ludwig's original play is pretty thin in places, so it's to the credit of all involved that it eventually launches off well.

Oh, and I've been to both Buffalo and Scranton; I couldn't give a judgment on which has more charm. Basically, they're both just freezing. But with great corned beef.

Moon Over Buffalo plays Fridays and Saturdays at 8 p.m., with a special Aug. 11 show at 8 p.m. through Aug. 13, with Sunday matinees July 31 and Aug. 7 at 2 p.m. For more information, call 442-6278 or visit www.ncrt.net.

Continuing

Five Lesbians Eating a Quiche serves up biting social commentary Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights through July 30 at Redwood Curtain Theatre. The 1950s period comedy packs some punch with well-acted characters as the stifflingly polite ladies' club meeting is interrupted by an atomic alert. Call 443-7688 or visit www.redwoodcurtain.com.

Upcoming

Tales of a Sexual Tomboy stops for a two-night stand at the Arcata Playhouse Aug. 5 and 6 at 8 p.m. Joyful Raven's one-woman comedy follows a young woman's romantic escapades as she stumbles into her own. Call 822-1575 or visit www.arcataplayhouse.org.

Plays in the Park shakes up Redwood Park with A Roaring Girl, the tale of feral female Moll Cutpurse, who rattles 17th century London with her sword fighting and hard partying. Runs Aug. 19 through Sept. 10. Call 822-5951 or visit www.cityofarcata.org.

Who Needs a DeLorean When You've Got Ears?

By Andy Powell

Hunter and the Dirty Jacks play Humboldt Brews on Friday, July 29, at 9:30 p.m.

Some music will always hold a dear spot in our lives. It could be a song that we listened to obsessively for days on end after a high school break up, it could be a full album, it could be the first live concert we ever attended, it could be “your song” shared with a girl/boyfriend in ninth grade, it could be the song played at your grandfather’s funeral. The music doesn’t even have to be good in order to transport you back in time, reminding you of important relationships and people you may have forgotten.

Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers’ “Into the Great Wide Open” brings me back to a hot summer day at work in Southern California after getting my driver’s license. U2’s “The Sweetest Thing” reminds me of my first girlfriend in high school and the emotional torments of that rollercoaster ride. Recently driving down to Oakland with a soon-to-be hitched pal and a friend with whom I’ve been tight since we were 12 listening to They Might Be Giants’ Severe Tire Damage album brought back a flood of memories and thoughts of another old friend Ed. Ed the TMBG superfan. I won’t bore you with any more details of our high school lives and how we thought listening to music and making mix tapes for each other was time better spent than chasing girls (looking back, I could have put a little more time into conversing with those fascinating creatures we called girls). Another regret, after listening to this music, is not having stayed in better touch with Ed. As I wait for him to return my call, dig through your vinyl/CD collection, throw on some tunes and get ready to time travel. You’ll be glad you did.

Thursday

In a move that will surprise none of us, a member of the Marley family will stop in Humboldt for the night. This musical dynasty has many branches and strong roots. There are enough branches that I — not your most reggae-enlightened fan — occasionally can’t place which branch is connected to which on the Marley tree and forget which Marley was here the most recently. With that disclaimer, I’m going to go out on a limb (clever, no?) and say that this is Jo Mersa Marley’s debut headline performance here in Humboldt, and you’ll find him at Humboldt Brews in Arcata tonight at 9 p.m. Now for you familial dendrologists out there, Joseph Marley is the eldest son of Stephen, and therefore a grandson of Robert Nesta Marley. Jo Mersa (nicknamed after a British boxer by one of his grandfather’s friends) delves into touches of electronic music friendly to the dance floor, but explores rhythms and grooves that are all steeped in reggae. He’s grown up in one of the premier musical families and shared some time on the road with his musician father, so expect a good show from this 25-year-old. Bring $20 to get in and groove away.

Friday

Sticking with Humboldt Brews here for a bit, Hunter and the Dirty Jacks are returning to rock Humboldt. Guitarist Jon tells me that the band loves to “jam like the Grateful Dead, we rock like the Rolling Stones, and we break it down acoustic and go back porch.” So you can get your fill of some bluesy-guitar-rock riffs tonight at 9:30 p.m. for only $10. Also in Arcata at the same time, you’ll find a “legend in the underground club music scene” at The Miniplex. This music, according to owner Merrick McKinlay, is called “goombawave” and it’s called that by performer P. Morris (aka MORRIS). Now, goomba reminds me of what were apparently sentient chestnuts from the Mario Brothers franchise, but I doubt that has much to do with it. From what I can tell, it has more to do with down tempo tunes and remixes. One of P. Morris’ Bear Club Music Group collaborators, Maal A Goomba, will be on the bill all hosted by Eureka native On Hell. It’s a sliding scale to get in, which may mean “throw in what you can.”

Saturday

Although you’ve got a lot of options for karaoke tonight, it seems to be a bit more of a mellow Saturday night than I expected. If you’re in the Eel River Valley area or close to it, you can get on up to Bear River Casino around 9 p.m. to get moving to local cover band The Undercovers. As I’ve mentioned before, this band covers some massive hits from the ’70s all the way up to our current 21st century, and they do it well. A friend and I recently concurred that not only is it impressive that the drummer of The Undercovers pulls off most of the lead vocals, but his ability to hit high notes like Steve Perry and Ceelo Green is a sight/sound to behold/hear. Catch ’em tonight for free.

Sunday

Speaking of free, Blondie’s in Arcata again hosts Jazz Jam for you cool cats out there. You can pop in and enjoy Belgian ales or other fermented delights while hearing fine local musicians play the night away. If you can’t make it tonight at 6 p.m., you’ll probably have another chance next weekend.

Although the Folklife Festival is a few weeks behind us, that doesn’t mean that the Humboldt Folklife Society is dormant. One of the more popular festival events is the Beatles sing-along under the direction of Joel Sonenshein. Perhaps a few Beatles songs will make an appearance tonight at the Humboldt Folklife Society Sing-Along in the Arcata Community Center for free at 7 p.m. Songbooks, I hear, will be provided so all you have to bring is your voice (as if you could leave it behind) to sing “your favorite folk, rock and pop songs.” If you haven’t tried singing with a large group before, I highly recommend it (especially as one who can’t sing well). Many of you probably know today is Jerry Garcia’s birthday. Local Dead tribute The Miracle Show (and friends) will be celebrating Jerome John’s birthday tonight at Humboldt Brews around 9:30 p.m. Celebrate the man with four fingers on his right hand. Bring twice as much money to get in.

Wednesday

Speaking of tribute bands, you can hear local Pink Floyd tribute Money for none of it tonight at the Blue Lake Casino and Hotel at 9 p.m. The bass player tells me (in the mirror) that the band plays the hits and deeper cuts from Floyd’s catalog as only a four-piece. So you can hear what Floyd might have sounded like had they not achieved superstar status and hired on extra musicians for their live shows post Dark Side. (Full disclosure: It’s best not to fully trust what bass players say.) ●

The Dark Crystal

The Arcata Theatre Lounge is bringing Skeksi back with the return of Jim Henson's puppet fantasy film The Dark Crystal on Sunday, July 31 at 6 p.m. ($5). This visual masterpiece pits a race of villainous vulture-like creatures against a couple of Druid-y Gelflings (and their roly-poly pet, Fizzgig) in an epic battle of good versus evil.

Last weekend you rolled at the Mattole and this weekend you can raise funds for more Humboldt firefighters at the 56th annual Westhaven Wild Blackberry Festival on July 31 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Westhaven Fire Hall (free entry). Take home homemade pies and jam, listen to live music, eat, drink and browse local arts and crafts with all proceeds benefitting the Westhaven Volunteer Fire Department.

If you and your kin like a little twang in your sang, don't miss Humboldt Light Opera Company's musical comedy Phantom of the Country Opera, opening July 29 and running Fridays and Saturdays through Aug. 13 at 7:30 p.m. with two Sunday matinees Aug. 7 and 14 at 2 p.m. at Humboldt State University's Van Duzer Theatre ($13-$19). Stir it Up

Pack your bags. Grab your trunks. Dread your locks. The most irie weekend of the year is right around the bend when French's Camp in Garberville transforms from quiet rural landscape to a reggae Mecca. Thousands of fans converge from Aug. 4 to 7 for the 32nd annual Reggae on the River ($200-$500).

Reggae music's biggest festival usually has an impressive array of superstars but word around the river is this year's roster is "the best ROTR lineup ever." So who's packing the concert bowl in 2016? Sizzla Kalonji & the Fire House Band bring the heat for sure, with Protogé and the Indignation Band, Anthony B, Mad Professor w/Soul Syndicate, King Yellowman, Million Stylez, Ziggi Recado, Sister Carol, Fatoumata Diawara, House Of Shem, No Maddz, Locos Por Juana and Bayonics keeping the vibe skankin'. With four days and nights of continuous music, there are too many to rattle off here. Catch the full lineup at www.reggaeontheriver.com.

In addition to the music, the culture at ROTR is a huge draw. There will be more than 60 vending and nonprofit booths, a hopping kids' spot, camping, great food and drink, yoga, massage and health and wellness offerings. And this year, environmental improvements to the gathering include the elimination of single-use plastic beer cups in favor of sleek ROTR steel pint cups. Also in keeping with reggae's global mindset, attendees are encouraged to bring a new or used tool to support the Tools For Change program, which last year sent a 40-foot shipping container of tools to rural communities in West Africa.

LIGHTS OUT. I have become a victim of my own scant optimism. Among horror movies, the ratio of bad to good remains dishearteningly high; higher, perhaps, than in any other single genre. I was never much of a fan to begin with, save a few notable outliers. In recent years, though, as the volume of new releases I see has risen so dramatically, all kinds of horror movies have been folded in to the mix. Most have left little to the imagination and much to be desired, but a rare few have altered my thinking about the genre. Horror, done well, can reconnect us with all the things there are to love about the movies. Style notwithstanding, these movies create a visceral connection to the action taking place on screen. They tap into sub-intellectual emotional stuff, strategically applying current to the nervous system. They make us feel something in a substantive and significant way. That's really the bottom line with any art — the evocation of emotional response. Of course, humans have been making art for a minute now, and so (most of) our tastes have evolved. We tend to favor storytelling, nuance, narrative complexity, authentic characters, a sense of style, even. Movies, more than any other medium, are the product of the awkward union of art and finance, though. And because horror movies are so immediate, so addictively provocative, they will always have an audience. That audience will spend to see whatever is thrust before them, so the smart play would be to reduce the bottom line and maximize profit. This almost always means the reduction of all those elements, those products of evolution listed above. And we're left with threadbare plots, cheap tricks repeated ad nauseam and minimal production value. Lights Out is the remains.

After hours at a creepy textile factory crowded with mannequins, something seems to be lurking in the shadows. Paul (Billy Burke), working late and stretched thin by his wife's mental health, calls home and assures his young son Martin (Gabriel Bateman) that everything will be fine. Of course, that's not true, and Paul is soon the victim of the shadow monster, which then transitions back to harassing Martin at home. Due to his obvious sleep-deprivation, Martin's school eventually contacts his older half-sister Rebecca (Teresa Palmer), who lives above a tattoo shop, likes post-punk and torments her doofus boyfriend with her intimacy issues. She returns to mom's house with little brother and finds a frighteningly familiar scenario. Her mother, Sophie (Maria Bello), is acting strangely, just like she did a decade before when Rebecca's father vanished. She's off her meds, holed up in her dark bedroom, talking to herself — or is she? Rebecca decides to intervene and things head to a weirdly protracted climax.

The germ of an idea at the center of Lights Out holds some interest: it was the subject of a short from which the feature was adapted, and that seems about right (David F. Sandberg wrote the short and directed both versions, Eric Heisserer wrote the adaptation). Even at a mere 81 minutes, the movie feels both over-long and rushed. Bello acts like she's in a different movie than everybody else, swinging for the fences with every knit of brow and forlorn stare. And the principle device, the main scare, gets played and re-played so often it becomes almost comical.

Because I've been pleasantly surprised before, I let hope get the better of me. I thought Lights Out could be another dark horse, a small movie from a secondary genre that reaffirms my love of the medium. It is not. And I guess I should be grateful that low-budget movies from new writers and directors, whatever form they take, even see the light of day. How's that for a high note?

PG13. 81M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

STAR TREK BEYOND. After a pleasantly comedic opening, we find Captain James T. Kirk (Chris Pine) at an impasse. He questions his own reasons for joining Star Fleet, the value of his contribution and the point of the mission. He's on the verge of accepting a desk job and recommending Spock (Zachary Quinto) to replace him when the Enterprise is assigned to respond to a distress call. En route, the ship is ambushed and crashes on a craggy, unforgiving planet. The crew is dispersed, some captured, some injured. Scotty (Simon Pegg, who co-wrote the screenplay) becomes the beneficiary of the mysterious, supremely capable Jaylah (Sofia Boutella). Together they re-connect with the captain, make a plan to rescue the crew, and suss out the motives of their attacker, Krall (Idris Elba).

There's too much lore and fervor around Star Trek for me to risk wading in on authenticity. It's pretty low stakes for me: The original movies were fun, I have no investment in the series (any of them) and that's about it. Justin Lin (installments 3 through 6 of the Fast and Furious series) keeps things brisk and flashy, as he is wont to do. The script holds some satisfying surprises, rich characters and funny asides. It's good fun, all in all, if occasionally too frenetic and narratively over-stuffed. PG13. 120M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (844) 477-7869 or visit this Internet Web site WWW.STOXPOSTING.COM, using the file number assigned to this case 029022-CA. The Real Wheel

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

An onager-drawn cart on the Sumerian "Battle Standard of Ur," about 2500 BC. Wikipedia/public domain

Imagine a time machine has transported you back about 5,000 years to ancient Egypt, and you're watching a crew of workers wrestle with a big block of stone. They're building a tomb for some A-list dude — before pyramids, there were lower, simpler mastabas (flat stone platforms) — and their system for transporting the block from quarry to tomb is to roll it on logs. As the heavy block rolls off the rear-most log, a couple of guys pick it up and place it at the front, so the stone is always supported on three or four rollers. You say to them, "Wouldn't it be a whole lot easier if you replaced the logs with a flat cart on wheels?"

"What's a wheel?" they ask.

While the step from logs (cylinders) to wheels (discs) looks pretty obvious to us, it was a technological stroke of genius, one so big that the wheel may have been invented only once before the knowledge spread throughout Eurasia and the Middle East. The birthplace of the wheel is disputed: linguistically, the first use of the proto-Indo-European word for wheel came either from what's present-day Ukraine or from Turkey, depending on who's making the case. Archeologically, the earliest image of a wheel was found in Poland, while the oldest actual wheel is from Mesopotamia, dating to around 3500 BC.

The leap from roller to wheel had to wait for the invention of the metal tools needed to craft holes in wheels and shape the ends of axles. In order for wheels to turn smoothly, the holes and axle ends had to be perfectly round and smooth — snug enough to keep the wheel in place but not so snug to prevent it from turning. The earliest metal tools were cast from copper; copper chisels make their first appearance in the archeological record around 4000 BC, while tougher bronze had to wait for another thousand years.

That wheel found in Mesopotamia was probably a potters' wheel, which, being horizontal, didn't have to bear as much load as a vertical wheel on a cart. The introduction of potters' wheels would have been a huge boon to early pottery makers, who were then able to turn out (literally!) pots in far greater numbers than before. Clay pots — essentially rat-proof containers, and also water carriers — would have made the day-to-day challenge of survival much easier.

Once our inventive forebears had figured out how to mount a pair of wheels on the ends of an axle, carts drawn by onagers (wild asses) or oxen soon followed. The earliest wheels used for transportation were solid slabs of wood from mature trees. The next technological advance came around 2000 BC with the invention of the spoked wheel. Before then, solid wheels facilitated slow transportation; after, the new technology led to nimble horse-drawn chariots, the ancient equivalent of Panzer light tanks. Records left by both sides, Egyptian and Hittite, following the Battle of Kadesh (1274 BC), attest to the utility of these mobile war machines: Some 6,000 chariots clashed in present-day Syria on the banks of the Orontes River. The result was a standoff, with leaders of both sides, Ramesses II and Muwatalli II, claiming victory for their forces.

Finally, fast forward around 3,000 years, when advances in metal technology led to the steel-spoked tension wheel, ubiquitous on early automobiles and on the most wonderfully efficient vehicles of all: bicycles.

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) would love to have seen Darwinian evolution lead to wheeled feet.
